

Cortado offers 1 GB of Free Online Storage for BlackBerry Smartphone users

Cortado launches a new solution in cooperation with online storage provider Box.net to offer 1 GB of free additional storage space for users with a BlackBerry Internet Service account

(Berlin, March 2008) Cortado and Box.net have today announced the launch of "Cortado Connect for Box.net," a new solution with optimised access to Internet storage services for BlackBerry® smartphone users with a BlackBerry Internet Service account. The software offers users the ability to manage both their local and online storage, as well as transfer files between them from their BlackBerry smartphone.

"Secure and accessible storage is a crucially important service, and increasingly this function formerly performed by a PC is being replaced by an Internet service. The BlackBerry smartphone is an ideal device for accessing such services," says Dirk Löwenberg, Business Director Cortado Services. "We are proud of the cooperation with Box.net - one of the leading providers in online storage."

The free solution provides secure storage for music, videos and documents as well as the ability to share online files with friends and family. The BlackBerry smartphone is the perfect tool to access and enjoy stored content.

"We are happy to be working with Cortado to offer BlackBerry users an easy way to manage, share and collaborate on their information." says Karen Appleton, VP of Business Development, Box.net

The solution is available now at www.cortado.com/connect and www.box.net!

Press Release

Box.net, Inc.

Founded in March 2005, Box.net (www.box.net) is the first online file system that enables users to share, store, and access files of any type from anywhere. Box.net is a leader in this space with more than 1.4 million users, over 1 million files served every day, and more than 1000 developers in the Box Enabled Network. Box.net is the first web-native system for access and collaboration which allows a broad array of functionality. The system is used by individuals, small businesses and Fortune 1000 companies. Box.net was the first internet storage provider to launch an open API in late 2005. In December 2007, the company launched its OpenBox platform, which connects data from Box.net with other applications and services across the web, allowing users to interact with their files in a wide range of web-based services and applications that drive productivity. The open platform permits companies and developers to integrate their applications and services on the Box.net website. Box.net is a privately held company headquartered in Palo Alto, CA.
